

Soccer squad ultimately falls in overtime to number one ranked team

By Bo Carver

The Lady Bucs soccer team, under the guidance of coach Nellie Christian, completed a successful regular season on Oct. 25, with an impressive 7-1 win over Bossier Parish Community College.

The team advanced to the final round of the regional tournament held at Shelton State by a forfeit by their first round opponent Hiwassee, the top ranked team from Tennessee.

Unfortunately, against Darton College from Georgia, the top ranked team in the nation, the Lady Bucs fell short losing by a score of 1-0 in overtime.

Katherine Trimm kicked the game-winning goal in the first minute after the 90-minute deadlock giving Darton college the win in the district F final at Howington Field on campus.

Coach Christian, however, was very pleased with her squad this season. The Lady Bucs started the season 1-3, but finished with an impressive record of 11-5-1.

"I couldn't ask for a better group of players,"

Though they ultimately went down in defeat to Darton college, the number one team in the nation, the Lady Bucs fought a terrific and fierce battle. They yielded nothing in 90 minutes of regular

Expectations high as Bucs take to the court

There is one drawback for being perennial contenders for state and national honors in any sport: you're expected to be champions every year, no backsliding allowed.

Such is the lofty and anxiety-laden circumstance both the ladies' and men's basketball teams find themselves in at Shelton State. The men are coming off a banner state championship year, which also saw several of its graduating sophomores move on to div. 1 programs.

The women, on the other hand, have an impressive yet ultimately disappointing streak going. They don't exactly want to see it end; they just want to improve on it a little. To wit, they are the consecutive three-time runners-up for the Alabama Community College Conference championship.

Now that's a pretty good run, but it could be, ahem, a little better. This year

Coach Madonna Thompson reportedly will be taking a slightly different approach to re-achieving the heights of previous championships and final-four runs. Having recruited a couple of 6'3" front court players and another six-foot-

When serious-looking young men started talking into their lapels and collars on the streets of Tuscaloosa on Oct. 25, bystanders knew that international diplomacy had come calling.

At the behest of Dr. John L. Blackburn, Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice came to town.

Along with her British counterpart Jack Straw, Rice was in Tuscaloosa to deliver the Frank A. Nix Lecture at the University of Alabama's Bryant Conference Center. Hundreds turned out to view the presentation on ethical leadership sponsored by the Blackburn

Human Resources

Third in a series of behind-the-scene articles explaining how things work at the college.

By Bo Carver

This article, the next of the series on what students need to know about Shelton, will outline just what the Office of Human Resources (HR) at Shelton State Community College is providing its college students.

Headed by its personnel director, Johnny Parker, the HR office strives to improve the school for the students. For many students who plan to pursue a career in education, the HR office is the place to start. Parker said students should know that the quality of their work is reflected in their transcripts from college, and that it follows students throughout their lives.

On a recent interview with Parker the Courier was informed about how the HR office is working to improve things for students.

"Our foremost job is hiring the best instructors and staff," Parker said. "The primary function of the Human Resources office is to manage the hiring process and insure that the integrity (of the process) is maintained."

Most of the work the HR office does is concerned with prospective employees; the office tries to improve the college with every new hire by providing students with the best possible faculty and staff. Hiring new employees, however, is not the only function the HR office performs.

The HR office also handles all processing for institutional work-studies. An institutional work study is a student who works part-time for the college while attending school and maintaining good academic standing. To be eligible a student must be enrolled in at least six semester hours at Shelton. Lori Swindle, a personnel clerk with Shelton in the HR office, is responsible for processing of all institutional work studies.

"There are a limited number of positions available. It is very important that students come by our office before the next semester begins," Swindle said.

Also available from the HR office are Process Improvement Forms (PIF's).

needed to teach in a secondary school system. Someone who would like to teach a program in a technical area, the minimum requirements would be an associate's degree with core subjects in the instructing area as well as three years of successful full-time employment in that field.

Johnny Parker runs the day-to-day operations at the Human Resources department at Shelton State.

These forms can be filled out by a student, graduate, parent, or anyone who has a suggestion or feedback of anything at Shelton. These forms are meant to improve the quality of programs for students. In fact the flexible work schedule came about because of a PIF and is now used by many of the staff at Shelton.

For any student planning on pursuing a career in education, Parker provided much information to benefit these potential employees.

"If graduates would like to apply, they need to know the requirements (for employment)," Parker continued, "Students soon to finish their education can put an application and resume on file. If a job becomes available (that they qualify for) transcripts and other information will be required."

Parker provided the basic requirements for consideration at Shelton. For someone who wishes to apply for a teaching job in an academic field, a Masters degree and 18 additional graduate hours are needed. These instructors do not need a teaching certificate such as would be

Applicants who would like to be an instructor for an occupational area need an associates or 60 hours in a plan program with coursework in the teaching field as well as three years full-time experience.

Any HR office is the place to start for those who wish to begin their careers.

At Shelton, the HR office is located on the third floor in room 3646. For more information is 391-2272

Costume contest becomes popular 'Quality' program

One of the most popular events on campus is the annual Halloween Costume Contest, held in conjunction with the Quality Program at the college. This year's winner was Molly Booth (above) of the President's Office with her "bun in the oven" regalia. Taking second was Shaquandria Hinton as a vampire. Lew Drummond emceed the contest and helped line-up the participants.

Institute.

The Blackburn Institute was founded 11 years ago by Blackburn, a long-time champion of higher education at the University of Alabama, Shelton State and elsewhere.

In 1958, Blackburn became Dean of Men at UA. Thanks to the unselfish vision and dedication of many, the University underwent a peaceful desegregation in 1963 and Blackburn was credited as an instrumental member of the process.

Blackburn was invited to become Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs at the prestigious University of Denver in 1969. It was at this point that he would reunite with his former associate John Rice, Condoleezza's father. Blackburn brought Rice over to work with him in the Office of Student Affairs.

Blackburn returned to UA in 1978 and headed up the development office as vice president. One of his

College offers variety of interesting criminal justice classes

By Dr. Jim Kenny
Publisher

Shelton State now offers entree into one of the hottest employment fields in the world: security, in several of its manifestations, including law enforcement and corrections.

This spring, the college offers a rather full slate of criminal justice courses. Many taking these classes will be law enforcement and security professionals looking to gain knowledge in specific areas, such as fingerprinting and crime scene investigation.

Shelton also offers a certificate in criminal justice, now in its second year, a 55-hour program that will make any student a well-grounded professional in an area of life and employment which seems to have taken a very large role in society in this post-911 world.

The coordinator of this program is retired Marine Lt. Col. Tommy Hester. Hester works full time out of Birmingham for the Homeland Security department, but he teaches classes in the fledgling program here and has high hopes and interesting goals for criminal justice education at Shelton.

Sporting an un-Corps like beard, retired Marine Lt. Col. Tommy Hester now teaches criminal justice classes at Shelton State.

nal justice education at Shelton.

Hester explains that the police academy training for Tuscaloosa and all of north

Alabama is currently held out at the Tuscaloosa airport. It is an eight-week course, a "minimum standards" program. Wouldn't it suit the college well to have that held here and be incorporated in the criminal justice certificate program? As Hester points out, such a program would dovetail beautifully with the state fire college already housed on the college grounds. Hester also hopes to see a 65-hour criminal justice associate's degree at Shelton one day.

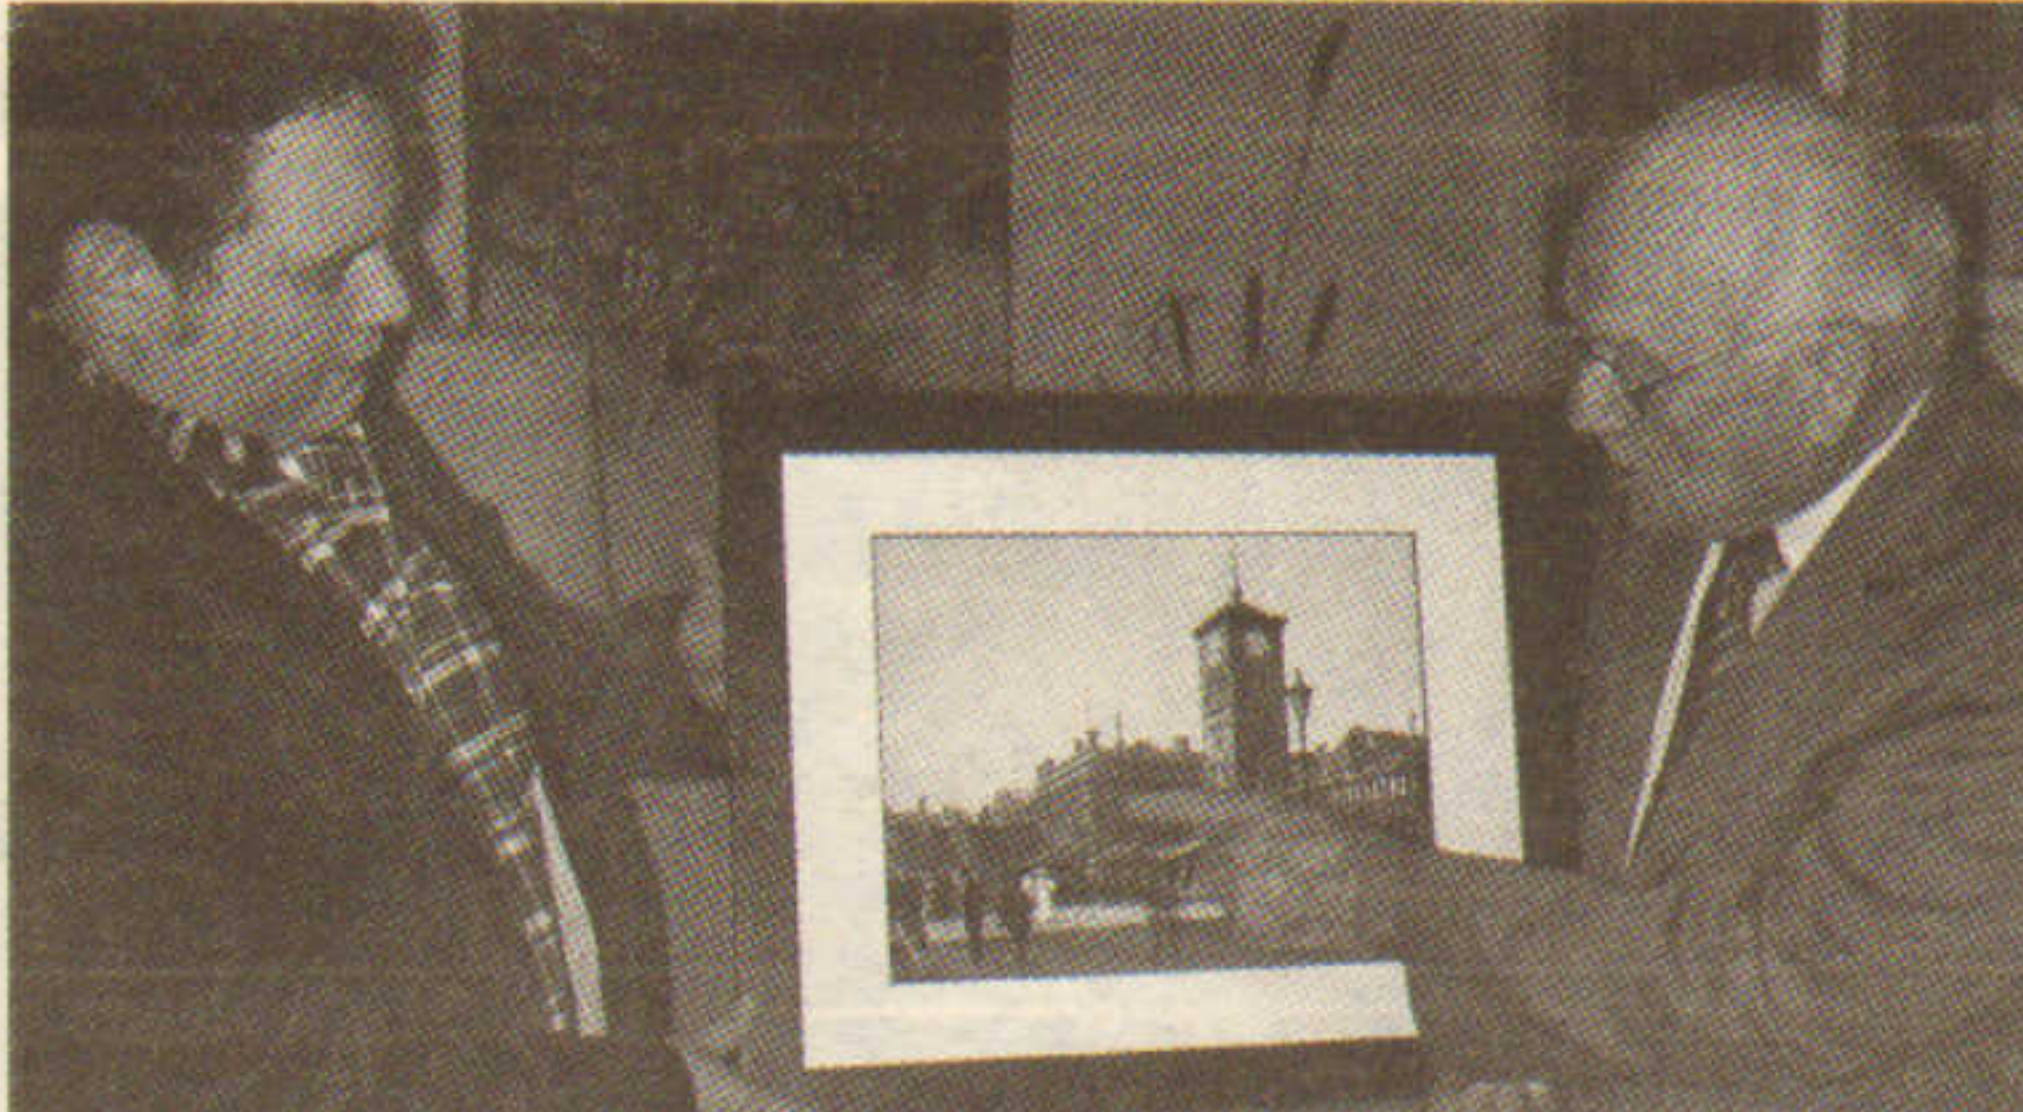

"We're talking years away before such a thing would be realized," Hester explains, "maybe eight years or so, but it would be a terrific fit."

In the meantime, Hester wants to stress the tremendous career opportunity the Shelton criminal justice certificate represents. And he especially wants to point out the great classes that were inadvertently left off the spring schedule. "I want to get the word out about CRJ 147: constitution law and CRJ 226: fingerprint science. These will be great classes for either professionals or young students to take."

Hester is a lifetime professional who began in policing at the University of Alabama, moved on to Tuscaloosa and was in the provost marshal area—law enforcement all of the 23 years of his military career. He also received a variety of other training while in the Marines, including the FBI training. "We have about 20 other instructors in the criminal justice program, and most of them have equivalent qualifications as I have," Hester points out.

Now sporting a very non-Marine, dapper beard, Hester has clearly taken his career in somewhat of a new direction, but he loves to share what he's learned over the years. "All of us accentuate practical technical experience in our classes, not just book learning. We've experienced a lot of different situations and the students, I think, enjoy hearing about them."

Dr. John L. Blackburn shows Courier editor Matt Celozzi the picture of Blackburn, England given to him by United Kingdom Foreign Secretary Jack Straw who represents that area in Parliament.

assistants in the '80s was Dr. Rick Rogers, now president of Shelton State, whom Blackburn called "a very effective fund raiser."

When Rogers and former Shelton State president Dr. Tom Umphrey began planning the new Shelton campus, they called upon Blackburn, by then retired from UA, to help with fundraising projects. The college rewarded his efforts by naming one of the new classrooms in his wife Gloria's honor.

The Blackburn Institute was designed in 1995 to create a network of student leaders from the University of Alabama. Throughout the course of their fellowship, the students discuss and attempt to solve many of the problems facing the state of Alabama.

Blackburn thoroughly enjoyed the experience of bringing Rice to Tuscaloosa and chuckled when so many people pointed out the glimpse of him on national TV next to Straw at the football game. "I didn't have to tell him much about American football. Condoleezza sitting on the other side was amazing in her explanations. She would tell him what was about to happen and then it would!"

coach Christian said. "I'm proud of the way the team has played this year. They're a good group of players and a great group of people."

According to observers, the team displayed great unity this season with nine players scoring goals. The top three scorers for the season were Ellen Campbell with 10 goals; Mitsy Perkins with 7 goals; and Lyndon Lasseter with 6 goals. The starting goalie Jessica Martinez recorded an impressive nine shutouts.

The Lady Bucs team finished an impressive season with a top ranking. The program has improved each season and continues to make strides forward.

A dramatic game filled with intense play took place Saturday afternoon Nov. 5 at Howington Field on campus. A powerful corner kick by Brittany Goodin, an exhortation by Coach Christian, and fancy footwork by Ellen Campbell were all part of the action.

Shelton State's Jimmy Osmore honored

Jimmy Osmore, Instructional Curriculum Support Specialist at Shelton State Community College, has been selected to represent Tuscaloosa in the Empire Who's Who Among Executives and Professionals in Education.

Osmore, joined the staff at Shelton State in 1985 and became a full-time employee in 1991. He has served on the United Cerebral Palsy of West Alabama board of directors for 21 years and was recently awarded their "Lifetime Achievement Award."

The mission of Empire Who's Who is "to recognize successful individuals both nationally and internationally in multiple industries and professions by providing a forum for networking, consulting, exposure and credibility in hopes to broaden one's future success."

College's nursing students have 100% pass rate

Kim Inman Smith, director of Nursing Programs at Shelton State Community College, announced that students taking the NCLEX-RN nursing exam during the past fiscal year had a 100% pass rate.

"We had 43 students test and 43 passed the NCLEX-RN. For the PN group we had 64 to test, 58 to pass for a 90.6% pass rate for the same time period," said Smith.

NCLEX-RN and NCLEX-PN examinations are administered by the Testing Services Department of the National Council of State Boards of Nursing (NCSBN). The Alabama state standard is that 80% will pass NCLEX on their first attempt. The PN pass rate for Alabama was 87.9 with a RN rate of 86.87%.

"We know how fortunate we are to have the quality of faculty that we have. Each and every faculty member is to be commended for their incredible commitment and dedication. Their diligence has paid off in the outstanding test scores of our students," said Camille Cochrane, Dean of Instruction at Shelton State.

In a message to Dr. Rick Rogers, president of Shelton State, Laura Steadman, Director of Health Programs for the Alabama College System offered her congratulations saying, "The Shelton State Nursing Program is to be commended."

Shelton State is most Popular two-Year school in Alabama

Dr. Rick Rogers, president of Shelton State, announced that data from ACT shows that Shelton State was the most popular two-year institution in Alabama when adding all choices disregarding ranked preferences with 1,344 total choices.

The college entrance exam asks students to list schools to which they want their score sent, an indicator of where they are likely to apply.

"This report reflects statewide results, not just from our service area. Obviously, the quality of the programs at Shelton State is widely recognized," said Rogers.

Instructor to present at the International Conference on College Teaching and Learning

Wynora Freeman, English instructor at Shelton State, will present her proposal,

"The Transformational Leader in the Classroom," at the 17th International Conference on College Teaching and Learning in Ponte Vedra Beach, Fla. in April 2006.

The seventeenth annual conference will stress the applications of learning and motivation theory and research and technology to higher education learning. The conference will provide over 350 faculty presentations to 1,000 attendees in all academic fields from throughout the world.

The conference is co-sponsored by the Center for the Advancement of Teaching, and through the Southeastern Center for Cooperative Learning.

PAL and Shelton State Foundation establish Alvin P. DuPont Scholarship

Tuscaloosa's Police Athletic League (PAL) has endowed a scholarship with the Shelton State Foundation honoring long-time Tuscaloosa Mayor Alvin P. DuPont.

The annual scholarship will be presented to a young person who has participated in the Police Athletic League programs and will be chosen by the PAL team.

"Mayor DuPont has been a huge supporter of PAL. We are delighted to recognize his long service to the community with a scholarship named in his honor," said Greg Kosloff, head of PAL and president of the Shelton State Foundation.

PAL, a juvenile crime prevention program founded by Chief Ken Swindle, was borne out of the troubling situation that confronted some young Tuscaloosans, who were often unsupervised and left to experiment with drugs, alcohol and much worse.

PAL provides a positive alternative to these distractions, offering students a space to study, exercise and be in contact with responsible role models.

"This is a wonderful collaboration between PAL and the Shelton State Foundation to recognize and support a deserving student," said Lewis Drummond, Shelton State Foundation executive director.

Truck driving students deliver relief

A Shelton State 18-wheeler will hit the road on Wednesday, Nov. 2 carrying 27,950 lbs of food to a distribution center in Waveland, Miss.

The food supplies have been collected by the West Alabama Food Bank in Tuscaloosa for the Hurricane Katrina relief effort. The student drivers, who will be traveling with an instructor, have passed all required training and testing at Shelton State. The student drivers will assist the instructor in navigation and driving on the 500+ mile trip.

"This is a wonderful opportunity for the two students as they gain valuable over the road driving experience involving traffic negotiation, negotiating weight scales, open road and city driving," said Dave Rodgers, Assistant Director for Corporate Training and Services at Shelton State.

For additional information on the relief trip, contact Dave Rodgers at (205)454-6872.

When the lights come on....

Before the lights went up over the ol' ball field, they had to be laid out in the parking lot, making quite an electric display.

Second annual tournament attracts large fleet of golfers

About 112 golfers paid $100 each to take part in the second annual Shelton State Athletic Golf Tournament Oct. 27 at Tannehill National Golf Course. Combined with hole sponsors, this fleet of golfers raised about $10,000 to help fund the college's athletic programs. "This event is getting better and bigger each year," commented Assistant Dean Susan Mohun, who coordinates athletics for Shelton. "We are so grateful for everyone's participation." Among the participants were (above) basketball coach and athletic director Barry Mohun who gave the rolling orders for the event; (above R) Steve Davis and Bob Stewart of Tuscaloosa's Power and Rubber Co. and Shelton athletes who served as hole marshals and scorers; and a trio of Shelton supporters: Drew Linn of Southland Trucking, former Shelton State President Tom Umphrey and former dean Britt Turner.
